Subject: DOJ vs Microsoft Settlement Proposal

As a long time user of Microsoft products, I don't believe that the proposed settlement goes far enough in remedying the underlying business practices MS employs, nor does the "enforcement" team of 3 persons have enough authority or scope to enforce those remedies.

The issues raised by the "objecting" 9 states better represent my position.

In particular, I want to state that the suggestion that Microsoft donate products to public schools to be offensive and contrary to any punishment that may be meted out against the company. If any donations are to be made to public schools, they should be in the form of hard currency, for the schools to spend as they please (on InformationTechnology).

Thank you,
